Welcome to this our 35th auction, postponed from the end of last year due to some last-minute consignments. As a result of this, most collecting fields are covered, including some interesting Ancient coins and some choice and rare hammered pennies. Other pieces of note in the selection of Hammered coins are a choice noble of Edward III, a rare Richard III angel, a highly desirable Elizabeth I halfcrown from an old collection that is the finest we have seen, and two different issues of Charles II unites in extremely fine or better condition. Choice pieces in the Milled section are guineas dated 1680 and 1694/3 and two mint state five guineas of James II and William III, and we are also offering the ultimate five guineas, the 1703 VIGO, a coin that is rarely seen on the market and this being the extremely rare variety with the word VIGO just under the shoulder. Also on offer in this section are a choice 1738 half guinea and a mint state 1745 LIMA half guinea, a George III mule Bank of England dollar struck in gold, ex-Murdoch (the first time in over a hundred years that it has been offered at auction in London), an exceedingly rare proof gold half guinea Sheffield token, 1812, and the ever-popular Una and the Lion five pounds, 1839, graded by NGC Proof 64, an extremely high grade for this piece. The sovereign selection contains a number of choice and rare specimens including a William IV ‘First head’ 1830 proof that is possibly unique, the ‘Second head’ 1831 and a proof 1839 issue.

In this sale we are also offering Part I (London tokens) of a superb collection of 17th century tokens that covers the entire series and was formed over the last 40 - 50 years. The remaining two parts will be sold later in the year. Of particular interest among the selection of medals are an Egyptian gold medal, 1801, issued to the Allies who defeated Napoleon at the Battle of the Nile, a Hong Kong Certificate of Honour silver gilt medal, an exceedingly rare East India Company, Haileybury College, gold prize medal and a couple of rare Russian medals.

Highlights among the Foreign coins are an Australian ‘holey dollar’, a coin that is rarely offered for sale in this country, a choice Hong Kong 1941 cent, a spectacular Iranian silver specimen set with its original case, and very highly graded by PCGS, a choice Indian 2 mohurs, 1835, a rare mint state Mexican ‘hookneck’ 8 reales, 1824 and a gold kyat from Myanmar which, although pierced, is exceedingly rare and is believed to be only the third example known. There is also in this section an interesting group of early Dutch gold coins which includes a very rare double rose noble imitating the ‘fine’ sovereign issue of Elizabeth I, a choice Russian rouble, 1802, and a possibly unique copper test splash for a Burgers pond reverse hub die. A Burgers pond is also offered for sale, as well as some South African patterns, some unusual and rare USA coins and a small Islamic section.

The sale concludes with a selection of banknotes, the major part of which comprises a fantastic group of German East African notes that has just been discovered, having been hidden for over 80 years. Never having been offered for sale before, this is a wonderful opportunity to acquire some rare and choice notes.

Many thanks for your continued support, and we hope we will see you at our next sale in June.

£10,000-15,000

When Elizabeth Tudor died in the early morning of 24 March 1603 at Richmond Palace, she had lived for seven decades and had reigned as sole Queen of England for forty-five years. Born to Anne Boleyn and Henry VIII, she grew up without a mother and all but ignored by her father, to whom she was more than a disappointment, not being a boy. The English public knew almost nothing about her, and at court and in much of Europe she was considered to be illegitimate. When she passed away in old age, much of the world knew her as a brilliant monarch and she was greatly loved throughout her kingdom. As the day dawned on 24 March 1603, her coffin was reverently lit by torches on a royal barge that carried her remains downriver to Whitehall. A month later, her coffin was moved to Westminster Abbey. The hearse was drawn by four horses draped in black velvet, and the Elizabethan chronicler John Stow recorded that ‘Westminster was surcharged with multitudes of all sorts of people in their streets, houses, windows, leads and gutters, that came out to see the obsequy, and when they beheld her statue lying upon the coffin, there was such a general sighing, groaning and weeping as the like hath not been seen or known in the memory of man’. It was a remarkable transformation! Over the course of her life, Elizabeth I, Tudor, had altered the English monarchy in numerous ways, not the least of which was tendering to the Crown the true affection of her diverse subjects, a passion little felt for any previous royalty.

Numismatists have little trouble finding coins of Elizabeth, but locating any coin featuring a complete portrait is a major difficulty, owing to the way most of the coins were struck and to the ravages of the centuries. We are left with images of her on statues and paintings held by museums, and on many of her coins. These images portray a life at court but not always realistically. Beautiful as a girl, Elizabeth withered over time, as nearly everyone did in the sixteenth century. After the Armada in 1588, her image in paintings became more fanciful, and artistically she was fashioned after Gloriana, as eternally youthful, the Faerie Queene of Spenser’s epic poem. Portraits in later years became increasingly less true to life. She had been blighted by smallpox in 1562, pockmarked and made partially bald. She wore wigs and coated herself in layers of fragrant powder in order to mask reality. One of the finest but most fanciful paintings of her is ‘The Rainbow Portrait’ of 1600, which possibly inspired the final images of her on the coinage, none finer than the image found on this halfcrown.
Elizabeth I, milled coinage, sixpence, mm. star, 1562, bust D, large broad bust l., wearing elaborate dress, small rose behind, rev. long cross fourchee over shield of arms, shield not tapered (S.2596; N.2027; B&B.27-01/27-R1), usual die flaw at 5 o'clock on obverse, extremely fine with even light tone, an exceptionally even and well struck specimen £600-700

It has never been properly explained why Elizabeth I allowed a rather dubious Frenchman, Eloye Mestrelle, to come to the Tower Mint at the height of her own frenetic re-coinage in 1560/1561 to set up heavy and cumbersome, slow machinery to produce experimental coins. Mestrelle had been released from the Paris Mint under a cloud (quite probably forgery) and Elizabeth allowed him free rein to produce some rather handsome coins. Each coin took a long time to produce by his process but it could be that Elizabeth was interested in this innovative, new-fangled mechanical method. By 1562 he was in full (albeit rather slow) production and this sixpence is a handsome piece, distinguished by an extraneous piece of metal in the die, visible at 5 o'clock on the obverse. Most specimens of this scarce issue have had some crude attempt to remove the flaw which detracts from its interest and numismatic value. It is testimony to the previous owners that they have not tampered with such a fine coin, thus making it very rare and desirable.

James I, second coinage, thistle crown, mm. escallop (1606-7), crowned rose between I-R, rev. crowned thistle between I-R, wt. 1.95gms. (S.2627; N.2096), has possibly been in water, extremely fine £700-800

A very well struck example of this rare coin.

James I, third coinage, laurel, mm. trefoil (1624), fourth laur. bust l., mark of value behind, rev. long cross fleury over crowned shield of arms, wt. 9.03gms. (S.2638B; N.2114), almost very fine £1300-1400

Charles I, halfcrown, Tower mint, type 3a1, mm. crown (over bell on reverse) (1635-1636), king on horseback l., scarf flies from king's waist, rev. garnished oval shield of arms (S.2773; N.2209), some weakness below horse, very fine or better, a rare overmark £650-750

Probably an ex-Thames find.
James II, five guineas, 1687, TERTIO, second laur. bust l., rev. crowned cruciform shields, sceptres in angles (S.3397A; Schneider 453), in plastic holder, graded by PCGS as Mint State 61, with a balanced sharp strike producing an excellent portrait of King James and bold details in the royal legends and across the emblematic shield, with lustre remaining, very rare and most especially in this splendid condition £50,000-60,000

During this, the second reign following the Civil War in which the Mint worked especially hard to stamp out memories of the images of money coined during the Commonwealth era, the design of 5 guineas and smaller gold coins continued largely unchanged from that of Charles II. Gone forever were the legends in English and the generic shields which had dominated the coinage made without regal consent. Charles’s right-facing portrait, elegantly engraved by John Roettier, was turned to face to the left and displays a somewhat more complexly fashioned presentation of the flowing periwig of Charles’s younger brother, but otherwise is essentially a near-copy of the earlier portrait. The reverse was duplicated save for the date changed each year of issue. The dividing sceptres of the reverse shield, symbolising regal power not possessed by Cromwell or his cohorts, became a stalwart image for Restoration monarchs’ large gold coins; the shield formed using sceptres of this style is displayed on all 5 guinea issues from 1668 to 1726, with the exception of the issues of William & Mary.

At the Royal Mint during the final years of Charles II’s reign and up to the year before this coin was minted, a silent battle occurred concerning the fineness of the gold used to make the guinea coinages. Details may be found in C.E. Challis’s New History of the Royal Mint, pages 351-357, but in essence the so-called Slingsby affair involved a retainer of a tiny portion of the gold content of the guinea coins, seemingly with the knowledge of a few officers of the Mint, which had been obtaining its gold specie from London goldsmith Jonathan Ambrose. In 1684 one of Ambrose’s employees was found to have concocted a plan to debase the coinage ever so slightly for his own profit ‘by putting copper in the gold scissell’ but this infraction was soon discovered and the culprit suspended from his position. If the gold of James II appears at times to have a very subtle, faint coppery hue, compared to the yellow-gold standard, it may derive from this fleeting moment in the Royal Mint’s history.

William III, five guineas, 1701, D. TERTIO, ‘fine work’, second laur. bust r., rev. crowned cruciform shields, sceptres in angles (S.3456; Schneider 480, plain sceptres), in plastic holder, graded by PCGS as Mint State 62, an evenly bold strike on both sides, just a touch of wear on the king’s hair, only tiny abrasions in the open golden fields, choice mint state, very rare £50,000-60,000

On the death of Queen Mary at the very end of December 1694, King William ruled alone for the first time. Silver coinage and small gold in his name commenced in 1695, but his first large gold pieces were minted in 1699. While much of the energy of the Royal Mint’s workers and administrators was devoted to the Great Recoinage of the silver, and the temporary establishment and furnishing of branch mints around the kingdom during this reign, no little attention was given to the standard gold which was the backbone of the nation’s financial strength. The need was indeed great to recall worn, clipped, and difficult-to-value older silver. Tons of it came into these smelting and minting facilities beginning late in 1696 and concluding in 1698 but the year 1697 saw the heaviest exchange. By 1699, almost all old silver in circulation had been exchanged, and melted, and the country saw a deluge of bright, freshly minted sixpence, shilling and halfcrown coins.

At just the same time, Isaac Newton’s work at the Mint changed from that of Warden to Master-worker, or Mint-master. As a man of science, Newton brought both more control and a more scientific approach to the operations of the Mint. Beginning in 1699, Newton watched and weighed the Mint’s suppliers of gold especially and soon learned that a few grains of gold was a standard variance for the Mint that was being used to certain merchants’ advantage when they returned slightly heavy coins to the Mint for a profit. Newton began testing all newly minted gold to assure that it would be of precise weight and fineness, and also required exact measures of all worn and foreign gold brought to the Mint in exchange for new money. By treating foreign money as mere bullion rather than accepting it at a set exchange value, he caused an influx of worn gold to come into the Mint during 1701-02, most of which was coined into guinea denominations. In this way he caused British gold coins to be consistently pure and of precise value. The Royal Mint had been modernized.

The first 5 guineas issued for William III varied greatly on the reverse from the coins issued by him with Mary, reverting to the cruciform style seen on the gold of Charles II. The king’s portrait was shallowly engraved. But Newton had not finished making changes at the Mint; next he attempted to complete the transition begun during the Renaissance, of departing from the shallow style of portraiture of the monarch to one that suggested lifelike qualities. In 1701 he cause a portrait to be engraved that would not be equalled until the 1760s’ patterns of George III. As Mint-master, Newton’s finest artistic achievement is, without argument, the deeply engraved 5 guineas of 1701, now known as the ‘fine work’ issue, and it has become one of the classics of British numismatics. Its conception has never been documented in detail but its appearance arose from another propitious change at the Royal Mint. For about a third of a century, the job of engraving coin dies had been dominated by the Roettiers family of Brussels. The elder of the family, John, had found favour with Charles II when Thomas Simon, as the former engraver of Cromwell’s coins and seals, saw his tenure decline. John and his brothers, Joseph and Philip, in the words of Challis, exercised the ‘controlling influence over English engraving’ during the last years of the seventeenth century (New History of the Royal Mint, page 363) along with John’s sons James and Norbert, who under his guidance completed much of the die-work during the reigns of James II and of William & Mary and then of William alone. Slowly, the Roettiers faded from the scene. John the master engraver suffered injury, Joseph moved to the Paris Mint, Philip returned to Brussels to work, Norbert left for France in 1695, and James came under suspicion of counterfeiting in 1697 and was dismissed. No one capable was left, save for a young assistant named James Bull. Then suddenly a German jeweller from Dresden named John Croker was brought to the Mint. He soon tired of re-engraving dies made by the Roettiers during 1698-99, and he produced the now-famous ‘flaming hair’ shillings. Newton and others took note and promoted him. His mark on English coinage and medals became indelible, and among his medals may be found exquisite images in high relief, but his greatest achievement was certainly the ‘fine work’ engraving of the king’s portrait used in only one year, 1701, on the gold 2 guineas and 5 guineas. These are the ultimate numismatic images of the reign, magnificent money created three centuries ago and rarely equalled as works of art in all the years that have followed.

The commercial focus of the Royal Mint at the turn of the eighteenth century was upon silver coins, those being most in demand both at home and for trade abroad. Various monetary indentures mainly concerned silver, but any shortage normally encountered had just been addressed during the previous decade by way of the temporary establishment of mints scattered about the kingdom for the purpose of melting old silver and striking fresh coins of good and consistent weight and fineness. Those ‘branch’ mints were now closed, and silver was being produced in modest quantity when Anne ascended the throne. In truth, at the time there was a dearth of silver mined within the realm. The output of fresh silver coins had again become ‘dependent on special circumstances such as the fortuitous arrival of foreign booty’ (Challis, A New History of the Royal Mint, page 433).

‘The most spectacular of these windfalls’, Challis continues, occurred almost by happenstance just as Anne became queen. The year 1702 marked the beginning of the War of Spanish Succession, which was a contest for dominance between two sets of allies, England and the Dutch Republic against France and Bourbon Spain. Old allies and old enemies they surely were. A fleet of Anglo-Dutch warships attempted to seize Cadiz but the attempt failed in mid-September. The commander of the fleet, Admiral Sir George Rooke, had begun his homeward journey and most certainly was dejected at the idea of returning to home port without success when he was informed by spies that a Spanish treasure fleet had recently anchored at Vigo Bay on the northwest shore of Spain.

What was at hand, he had learned, was an armada of Spanish ships carrying specie mined in Spanish Mexico. The fleet had sailed from Veracruz protected by a French squadron of fifteen warships. Three galleons were loaded with silver and gold. Frigates and attending ships added up to a fleet of 56 vessels, many carrying merchandise intended for sale in Spain, and all were moored in Vigo Bay. A furious naval battle was fought on 23 October and the victory was England’s despite a boom consisting of heavy chain and timber that stretched across the entrance to the bay, and a battery of cannons, meant to block and defeat any attack. The Dutch and English men o’ war crashed through the boom. The Spanish set a fireship alongside the Dutch admiral’s flagship, intending to burn it, but the Spanish ship was loaded with snuff from the Indies and it blew up! The Spanish guns were quickly silenced, the boom was gone, and the Anglo-Dutch warships sailed right into the heart of the harbour, destroying most of the enemy’s ships and capturing the others. In a day and a half, the Battle of Vigo Bay had been won, and the booty was up for grabs. At first, jubilation reigned, but then the English discovered that most of the treasure from the New World mines had been unloaded before they arrived at Vigo.

Winning the battle was of great moment in the war. What remained of the specie was taken and delivered to the Royal Mint. It did not consist of Mexican silver but rather it amounted to 4,500 pounds of silver that had been ornaments and ‘plate’ belonging to the Spanish and French officers, as well as 7 pounds 8 ounces of gold (Challis, page 433). The Spanish king, Philip V, issued a decree claiming ownership of the precious metals. In response, Queen Anne caused to be issued a royal warrant, dated 10 February 1703, instructing Mint-master Isaac Newton to mark all coins made from captured specie to ‘Continue to Posterity the Remembrance of that Glorious Action’ at Vigo Bay. Today’s collectors often encounter silver sixpence, shillings, halfcrowns and crowns made from this treasure, but the gold produced few coins and today all are extremely rare. Least minted were the 5 guineas of 1703. Only a handful are known. Of them, the rarest variety (perhaps as few as two others known) is that showing the VIGO placed higher toward the queen’s shoulder, as seen on this wonderfully historic coin.

A Lima guinea in extremely fine has just been sold for £31,200.

British coins marked with the bold capital letters LIMA are storied survivors of a grand moment in history. Reminiscent of the Vigo coins from Queen Anne's reign, these celebrated a much grander victory and a far larger treasure trove, taken on the high seas from the Spanish. The Vigo and Lima silver coins are of about equal scarcity, and many collectors own examples. The gold pieces are another story. Lustrous and choice-looking examples remain elusive and are collecting prizes.

The middle of the eighteenth century was the great era of sailing ships, and the end of privateering by buccaneers, whose piracy at sea reached its zenith a century earlier in the West Indies. By tradition, crews shared in captured prizes, adding incentive for crews to be included on any buccaneering mission. The spirit of those adventurers still resonated in the British Navy when Commodore George Anson set sail with a squadron of warships on 18 September 1740, hoping to locate and to attack Spanish galleons laden with silver and gold mined in South America. It was a voyage requiring much skill and great courage; and the commander of the squadron was ready for the challenge. Born in 1697, Anson was by 1740 an experienced navigator and captain, commissioned as a lieutenant in 1716 and having taken part in Admiral Byron's victory in August 1718 at Cape Passaro. He was promoted to commander in 1722, charged with capturing smugglers in the North Sea. By 1724, he had been promoted to post-captain in command of a frigate sailing off the coast of South Carolina to protect British ships from Spanish pirates, and from the end of 1737 until late 1739 his ships did similar duty off the west coast of Africa and in the West Indies.

As commodore, Anson set off from England in the autumn of 1740 with a squadron of eight ships manned by marines, charged with attacking the Spanish navy in the Pacific. Little did Anson realize that this was destined to be a voyage around the world that would become famed for its success. Anson's ships reached treacherous Cape Horn at the height of a terrible storm and most of the squadron was unsuccessful at clearing the cape into calmer seas. Two ships gave up and turned back for England. Others were wrecked. Only Anson's flag ship and two warships got through to the Pacific, with a loss of hundreds of crew. On the three ships remained just 335 sailors and marines, of the 961 original crews. But the long voyage was just beginning! Months later, Anson's force attacked and sacked the town of Paita in Peru, although the reward was small. Anson pressed onward, with the original goal firmly in mind despite all his setbacks. He aimed to attack the Spanish Manila-Acapulco fleet and capture its treasure. His crew was shrinking as disease took its toll on his men, and deprivation made two of the ships unseaworthy. All the crew was moved to his flagship, the Centurion, and they sailed west for the coast of China, arriving at Tinian by the end of summer 1742. They stayed ashore for months. Rested and restored, Anson's crew and warship finally steered for the Philippines. On 20 June 1743, they spotted the treasure galleon Nuestra Señora de Covadonga off Cape Espiritu Santo, engaged the largely unprotected Spanish ship, won the brief sea battle, and took possession of its treasure. To their disappointment, most of the Spanish treasure fleet had already sailed, but the Covadonga was no small prize. They discovered in its hold hundreds of thousands of pieces of eight and gold cobs mined and crudely minted at Lima, Peru.

They sailed for home around the Cape of Good Hope, but they and their prize were nearly captured by a French fleet in the English Channel before at last anchoring safely at Spithead on 15 June 1744. The tons of silver and gold were offloaded and carried by wagons along a parade route to the Mint in London. The total treasure was found to be nearly a million pounds in value, including proceeds from their sale of the Spanish galleon. Anson was cheered as a national hero and promoted to Rear Admiral. His share of the booty made him a wealthy man, but he continued to serve the Royal Navy, eventually being promoted to Admiral of the Fleet in 1761. He remained at sea in command of warships in 1746 and 1747, after which he oversaw naval reforms and advances in ship designs in the Admiralty Office. Numerous ships of the Royal Navy have been named after him but none has endured as a remembrance of his greatest victory for as long as the silver and gold coins marked LIMA in his honour by royal warrant. Many collectors worldwide own a silver coin made from this Spanish treasure but few are lucky enough to secure even one example of the Lima gold.

This extremely rare pattern bears an uncanny resemblance to a pair of dies illustrated in C. Wilson Peck’s English Copper, Tin and Bronze Coins in the British Museum, second edition, plate 20, the first obverse (although having the addition of a stop after REX), being the piece standing alone and marked simply ‘s’, while the second obverse seems to be that of R93. All this suggests that the coin seen in this lot, a mule struck using these two Soho Mint dies intended for the bronze twopence coins of 1797 and 1805 respectively, might have been minted at Soho about 1805, although it certainly could have been struck slightly later by W. J. Taylor, as referenced by Wilson & Rasmussen. Peck makes no specific mention of it nor of the other two patterns listed as W&R.147 and 148, although Peck’s footnote 2 on page 362 states that Taylor obtained a number of bank dollar dies ‘which he used freely for restriking’. Peck's Appendix 10 lists a variety of Taylor restrikes that appeared for sale in 1880 but no gold bank dollars are included. No matter when or where this piece was made, if crown-sized patterns struck in fine gold tickle your fancy, or stir your desire to engage in original research, this magical gold coin is for you!

ex Baldwin’s 125th Anniversary Auction, 13 October 1997, lot 103

Issued in extremely limited numbers during the worst moments of the Napoleonic War, this token is very rare in any grade, but here we see possibly the finest known example, possessing the qualities of a special strike and certified by PGCS as a proof. Choice in all respects, with deeply mirrored surfaces and a fully struck, deeply engraved image on each side, with a ‘perfect’ old gold colour. A few tiny flan flaws (as struck) appear in the fields but it has dramatic eye appeal and is extremely rare.

£140,000-160,000

Based on the Elizabethan epic poem by Edmund Spenser, The Faerie Queen, the design of the enchanting Una & the Lion five pound gold issue of 1839 remains emblematic of the English public's captivation with their young Queen Victoria, who was a teenager when she assumed her position as head of the British Empire. She was young and untried, the Princess Diana of her time. Engraver William Wyon's majestic image of her as the mythical fairy queen (the delicate lady Una, companion of the Redcrosse Knight in Book One of the allegorical poem) seemed then, and now, to capture the essential spirit of the Romantic Age, when adventuring ruled the British mind and when the world seemed Britain's for the taking. Victoria's 'little wars' abroad were all yet to be played out, and Victoria herself faced the kinds of challenges that no teenager could ever imagine. Over the coming decades, both triumph and defeat would burn into Britain's collective body politic as the wild escapades of Lord Byron and his contemporaries of the first four decades of the nineteenth century metamorphosed into the realities of conquest and dominion, and as Great Britain reached the zenith of its imperial ambitions. Victoria's most famous coin occurs with two small variant reverse legends, based on Psalm 119:133 and translating to state, or perhaps to pray, ‘May God Direct My Steps’. William Wyon seemed to sense and to express the untenable future of the Empire by the use of this legend, but his images of the queen guiding the British lion, engraved so deeply and firmly on this wonderful coin, evoked in the public a sense of power and an unquenchable belief in Britain's right to be great. What Wyon created for the Coronation Proof Sets of 1839 was one of the greatest classics of the Victorian Age.

Created by the Royal Mint’s master engraver, William Wyon, this great rarity importantly features the first or earliest portrait before slight modifications were added (the second portrait, W&R.260). The proofs included in the Coronation set of 1831 are of the second portrait style. The only other Proof sovereign featuring this early portrait is the similarly rare 1831 (W&R.262) struck with a reeded or straight-grained edge, which however is a Proof of Record (also known as a VIP or Record Proof), whereas the coin offered in this lot is a pattern, essentially the prototype for the entire series minted for William IV. This is the plate coin used in the Wilson & Rasmussen reference English Pattern, Trial and Proof Coins in Gold, 1547-1968 for number 259, and is listed for the first time in the 2016 edition of the Standard Catalogue, with no price and annotated ‘extremely rare.’

Australia, ‘holey dollar’, 1813, struck on a Lima portrait 8 reales of Carlos IV, 1807JP, counterstamped FIVE SHILLINGS, floral base around inner beaded circle about the central hole, legend not inverted but aligned with that of the Spanish coin, remnant of the classic pillars image counterstamped NEW SOUTH WALES 1813 inverted around the inner beaded circle (KM.2.13), some light surface marks on host coin, otherwise about very fine, the countermark very fine, rarely offered for sale in this country and a good example of Australia’s first coin £22,500-25,000

Australia’s first coin is nothing less than an emblem of exploration and discovery. For forty thousand years, only indigenous people inhabited this huge island in the South Pacific, and it was Captain James Cook who first stepped ashore in 1770, claiming the vast uncharted territory for Great Britain. It was an unknown land. Explorers would come over the following decades, slowly forging inland, but in the main Australia was a prison camp focused on a tiny bit of land; England’s courts sent the first cargo of condemned prisoners on a fleet that arrived in 1778 under the command of Arthur Phillip. Eight years before, in Cook’s party, Joseph Banks was aboard Cook’s ship, HMS Endeavour. Banks was a naturalist, so impressed by what he discovered when first arriving at port – plants, insects and animals unknown in Europe – that he dubbed the place Botany Bay. The prisoners being transported from England were less impressed, facing a life of indenture and hardship, and they were deprived of the wonders of Botany Bay when Captain Phillip decided on Port Jackson as the site of their new home. Phillip called the penal colony Sydney Cove in honor of secretary of state Lord Sydney. The colony immediately became a constitutional autocracy under control of a governor selected by a company formed in England in 1789, in effect a military regiment that oversaw the prisoners and other settlers after the royal marines that were part of Phillip’s fleet departed. The ruling company was called The New South Wales Corps.

New South Wales was a harsh land. Agriculture was not easily established. Food was in short supply for the original 778 convicts and their keepers. Most of the convicts lacked the skills needed to survive in the new land. But most survived and beginning in 1791 ships regularly arrived with additional prisoners, settlers and supplies from England. Slowly, convicts were emancipated and granted plots of land, and trade with the home country began. A whaling industry started, manned in part by retired soldiers and marines. A settler named John MacArthur formed a wool industry which became the colony’s first important source of exports. Several new towns near the original settlement were established by 1815, all engaged in raising sheep. The rum trade became corrupt, ending in a military rule of the colony from 1808 until 1810. The next decade experienced increased immigration of free settlers. By 1825, New South Wales had its own legislative council. A vast new land would soon open up to further exploration and development, and by 1840 the transportation of convicts was abolished. Australians were then all free people.

Hard, real money had been a problem since the founding of the colony. During the nineteenth century, scores of independent merchants issued ‘small change’ money, tokens bearing curious images of the land, in large numbers, but the only official money for decades consisted of Spanish silver 8 reales (dollars) out of which the centres were cut and a local value was inscribed by way of counterstamps. These are what we today call the ‘holey dollars’. Unknown quantities of 8 reales struck at various Spanish mints were the host coins, all dated from the middle of the eighteenth century into the early nineteenth century. These were chosen for their proven inherent value, based on their silver content. They became the standard coin for New South Wales. By the condition of most known examples, they were used long and hard, in local trade and for export. When gold was discovered near Bathurst in 1851, much of the population of New South Wales and other districts of the expanding country rushed to the gold fields, and within a year prospecting settlers thronged to the land from abroad. New discoveries of gold opened up more gold fields during the 1850s, and the former penal colony became transformed. Colonies became territories. Intense rivalries grew between territories. Commerce rapidly developed, and gold was its basis. The so-called ‘easy gold’ petered out within a decade of discovery, but mining had become a major industry across the land. The company BHP Billiton, which began in New South Wales as a silver miner in the 1880s, became a major producer of copper and other metals. Sydney became a centre for business. By the end of the nineteenth century, little more than a century after it was discovered by Cook, New South Wales had become one of the commercial focuses of the modern world. Its first money, the ‘holey dollars’ made from highly valued Spanish silver, had been long forgotten and most had perished in melting pots as unwanted – mere relics of a penal colony that formed the basis for the development of a modern nation.

Sarawak, James Brooke, copper keping token, 1841, badger l., initials JB in centre, SEPT 24 1841 below, rev. Hejira date 1247h (KM.TN1), in plastic holder, graded by NGC as Extremely Fine 45 Brown, with original colour and surfaces, very rare

£7000-8000

This distinct one-year type coin, based on the keping coinage of Singapore, was the first coin issued by the Brooke family for circulation in their private country. This piece, and imported Straits and other coinage, sufficed as local money until the regular coinage commenced in 1863. Almost all known pieces are well worn or damaged.

Sarawak, C. V. Brooke, bronze cent, 1941H, Heaton Mint, bare head r., rev. value within wreath (KM.18), in plastic holder, graded by NGC as Mint State 63 Red Brown, considerable original mint bloom, rare, the only difficult date to find in the series

£1500-1800

Last of the cent coinage, with a mintage of three million but nearly all melted as a consequence of World War II - Charles Brooke surrendered his powers in this year, having decided upon self-government for this private colony, but Japanese occupation ended all such plans. The Heaton Mint evidently never delivered its final production of cents, all other denominations having been halted earlier. The estimated survival of 1941H cents is 50 pieces, among which this specimen is clearly exceptional. An important colonial coin!

An Important Die-Trial for South Africa's First Gold Coin

605  South Africa, ZAR, Burgers pond (1874), copper test splash for the reverse hub die (unlisted), made at the Heaton Mint, a complete, deep impression of the reverse die, surrounded by the massive copper splash, virtually as struck, unknown in any other collection - a museum piece and probably unique  £6000-8000

Colonial South Africa provides numismatists with a fascinating glimpse at how a system of money, and the need for a native coinage, develop. The colony evolved as a disconnected group of immigrant settlements which initially used coins of their home countries as well as local tokens for money. Some of the early tokens were made of silver but in the main they were exchanged in good faith only. When gold was discovered in the Transvaal in 1869, a new era began for the area's inhabitants. The first gold coin was minted in 1874 in extremely limited numbers but was never put to any commercial use. Thomas François Burgers, second president of the republic, had been urged repeatedly to create a gold coinage that could be traded outside the country and trusted, based on its intrinsic value. No design for it had ever been advanced, however, so Burgers decided to approach the Birmingham, England, firm of Ralph Heaton & Sons to create a coin that would change the situation. Unfortunately he made the decision on his own, lacking any approval from his fellow legislators, and it was to prove to be such a fatal error that the initial gold coinage for South Africa was delayed yet again.

The Heaton Mint engaged the services of Leonard C. Wyon, the Royal Mint's engraver, to prepare dies showing a portrait of Burgers, possibly because Burgers himself supplied the gold specie for the coinage. On the coin's reverse appeared an artistically balanced, elaborate design showing the coat of arms of the fledgling republic. During the process of designing and advancing the stages of die development, Heaton tested the dies, and it is their test of the reverse 'coat of arms' die which we see in this lot. The gold specie used to make sample coins had been mined in the Transvaal, meeting Burgers' intention of making use of native gold ore. Mint records (see National Archives reference below) indicate that 837 pieces were made using up the amount of gold ore supplied to the mint by Burgers. When the Heaton Mint's samples reached South Africa, Burgers proudly displayed his gleaming new gold coins to members of the Volksraad, but the legislators objected vehemently to Burgers' use of his own image and they rejected the coin design which was to become the forerunner of the famed gold Pond. The new republic would therefore need to wait almost two more decades until its first gold Ponds appeared for commerce in 1892.

Although only 837 gold coins were struck by Heaton, a surprisingly high number of 16 working dies were needed, evidently because of the high rate of die breakage. These dies and punches (matrices) remain in the collections of the National Cultural and Open Air Museum in Pretoria, the Transvaal Museum, and the South African Mint Museum. It is rumoured that a working die is in private possession. Off-metal completed patterns exist in limited numbers, as listed by Hern, but no other physical samples of the coinage's preparation exists other than this trial splash for the reverse die. Research reveals that L.C. Wyon prepared two matrices, or die punches, that were used by the Heaton Mint to create working dies. The present splash, or hub trial, was made by pressing the die into molten copper alloy to test its design. Once tested, die trials and hub trials are normally destroyed, but this one survived.

Brian Hern (Hern’s Handbook on South African Coins & Patterns) discusses this extremely rare set of samples for the new coinage on pages 348-352. Attributions appear on pages 352-358 of that standard reference, where Hern gives estimates of rarity from 50 pieces down to as few as 5 for those included in this set. On page 348, he states that ‘It is believed that about 50 of these ‘Trial Pattern Sets’ were struck’. Bidders should read his comments fully, which track the creation and evolution of these pieces until the final new coin designs were decided upon. They are the predecessors of the Republic coinage that commenced in the 1960s. This is an opportunity to acquire these modern rarities, and these specimens are probably among the best examples extant.

A Collection of Banknotes of German East Africa

formerly the property of Casimiro Fernandes

Casimiro Fernandes was born in Goa on 2 March 1873. After his marriage to Lizarda Aurora Martiana Viegas, Casimiro and his wife left Portuguese India for Dar es Salaam, in what was then German East Africa, where he worked for the Customs Department. Following early retirement in 1912 he set himself up in business, trading as C. Fernandes & Co. Despite military and political changes during and after World War One, Casimiro and his family remained in Dar es Salaam and the business prospered. In 1926, Casimiro, now 53 years of age, moved to Europe with his wife and five children. Among the possessions taken away from Africa was a chest of paper money which remained unopened for over 80 years.

The contents of the chest are now to be offered for sale by auction, with the first 216 lots in this sale and the balance to follow later this year.
