* ex Red Cross sale, 8-25 April 1918

ex St James’s Auction 1, 13 October 2004, lot 119

Of an attractive golden colour and struck on a full round flan with splendid details - even the inner circle on the obverse is crisply struck. Edward’s face, hair and crown are unusually well-defined. The reverse is even more impressive, with all the letters clear and sharp, the inner beaded circle crisp and the lion and griffin supporting the royal shield truly remarkable.

Edward VI, first period (1547-1549), portrait halfgroat, Canterbury, no mm., crowned bust r., reads EDOARD as usual for Canterbury mint, rev. shield over cross, S of TAS over N (S.2459; N.1901; BNJ 1971, plate 2, no. 73), small metal flaw on king’s nose, otherwise very fine for issue, extremely rare, especially in this condition £700-900

This, and other pennies with the same style of variety, have been mis-identified for decades. The under date is in fact a two (2). The reason why no one has considered that it could be a 2 is because no 1852 pennies have ever been seen. The Parliamentary Returns of the Royal Mint for 1852 show that 236,424 pennies (value £1,097 12s) were struck. Montagu concludes that this small amount of coins would have been made using 1851 dies. Peck concurs and on page 404 at the end of the first paragraph writes “During 1852 the practice of using up old dies went a stage further, for it is believed that all pennies struck during that year were from unaltered dies of 1851”. At the beginning of each year the Royal Mint generally produces a ‘new’ die for each denomination in case of demand and probably in 1852 it would have been no exception. A few Pyx sample pennies would have been tested for die quality and then probably re-melted when not needed, as the 236,424 examples were produced with the remaining 1851 dies. Pennies from the 1852 die were re-melted but the die would still remain and shelved for possible later use. In 1856 it was first contemplated to reform the British copper coinage to a lighter smaller bronze coinage and the Royal Mint was well aware of the coming change. In 1858 the likelihood of change was expected within 12 months and it was therefore time for all older date dies to be used up, as a simple matter of economy, as they would eventually be scrapped. This is the probable reason for an 1852 die being overcut for use in 1858. This is believed to be the first time that this variety has been correctly identified for auction.

Scottish coins

848 James IV (1488-1513), unicorn, type I, mm. lis, unicorn stg. l., with crown on neck, holding Scottish shield of arms, rev. large, wavy star over cross fleury, pellet in centre, wt 3.85 gms (S.5315), good very fine £3250-3750

849 James IV (1488-1513), half unicorn, type I, mm. lis, unicorn stg. l., with crown on neck, holding Scottish shield of arms, rev. large, wavy star over cross fleury, pellet in centre, wt 1.91 gms (S.5320), a full round coin, very fine or better £3500-4000

850 Mary, three pounds, 1555, bust l., rev. crowned arms, wt 7.50 gms (S.5397), fine or better for issue, very rare £5500-6000
851 Mary, two-thirds ryal, 1565, crowned shield, thistle each side, rev. tortoise climbing palm tree (S.5426), small edge crack, otherwise toned good very fine £1000-1250

852 Charles I, third coinage (1637-1642), gold Britain halfcrown, crowned bust l., rev. crowned square-topped shield of arms, wt. 1.21gms. (S.5538), light scratch above head, otherwise good very fine, extremely rare £1250-1500

853 Charles I, fourth coinage (1642), two shillings, crowned bust l., small II behind bust, rev. crowned arms (S.5594), slight crease, otherwise good fine £175-225
A full, well-struck example and therefore unusually fine for this issue. A highly underrated rarity – the late Patrick Finn failed to acquire a specimen to list.

Irish coins

854 Elizabeth I, base coinage (1558-9), groat, mm. rose, bust l., rev. crowned harp, legends read REGI/MEVM (S.6504; B&C bust 1F; BCW. RS-1C/RS-a1), good very fine with an excellent portrait for this notoriously weak issue £250-300
